- Festivals must present, support and promote short film screenings and other events involving short films at each edition.
- Must have a large number of submissions and a rigorous selection process.
- Most short films in competition should be no more than two years old by the time of the festival. To be eligible for Oscar consideration in a short film category, winning films must not exceed 40 minutes in runtime.
- Awards under consideration for qualifying status should be the top prize awarded to only one film. Runner ups and honorable mentions will not be considered.
- Competing films should be diverse and inclusive of filmmakers and subject matter.

Festival applications will be reviewed by the Academy's Short Film Festival Selection Committee and the category's Branch Executive Committee. If approved, the committees will determine which award(s) will be accepted as qualifying awards for the Short Film categories (Animation, Documentary, and/or Live Action).
